In addition to its car companies, Detroit is also home to a number of legendary test tracks. These proving grounds have played a vital role in the development of new cars and technologies, and have helped to make Detroit a global leader in the automotive industry.

One of the most famous test tracks in the Detroit area is the General Motors Proving Ground in Milford, Michigan. The track opened in 1955, and has since been used to test a wide variety of GM vehicles, including the Corvette, Camaro, and Silverado. The track is also home to a number of special test facilities, such as a wind tunnel and a crash test center.

Another well-known Detroit-area test track is the Ford Motor Company Proving Ground in Dearborn, Michigan. The track opened in 1952, and has been used to test a variety of Ford vehicles, including the Mustang, F-150, and Explorer. The track is also home to a number of special test facilities, such as a high-speed oval and a skid pad.

The Chrysler Proving Ground in Chelsea, Michigan is another important Detroit-area test track. The track opened in 1949, and has been used to test a variety of Chrysler vehicles, including the Jeep Wrangler, Dodge Ram, and Chrysler 300. The track is also home to a number of special test facilities, such as an off-road course and a cold weather testing facility.

These are just a few of the many test tracks in the Detroit area. These tracks have played a vital role in the development of the automotive industry, and have helped to make Detroit a global leader in this field.
