Isla de las Muñecas (Island of the Dolls)

Located in Xochimilco, Mexico, Isla de las Muñecas is a small island known for its eerie collection of dolls. According to legend, a young girl drowned in the island's canals in the 1950s, and her spirit possessed the dolls that were placed on the island to appease her.

Today, the island is covered in hundreds of dolls, their faces weathered and their bodies mutilated. Visitors to the island often report hearing strange noises and seeing the dolls move on their own.

Poveglia Island

Located in the Venetian Lagoon, Italy, Poveglia Island has a dark and troubled history. It was once used as a quarantine station for plague victims, and later as a mental asylum.

The island is said to be haunted by the spirits of those who died there. Visitors have reported seeing apparitions, hearing screams, and feeling an overwhelming sense of sadness.

Devil's Island

Located off the coast of French Guiana, Devil's Island was once a notorious penal colony. Between 1852 and 1953, over 80,000 prisoners were sent to the island, where they were subjected to harsh conditions and brutality.

Today, Devil's Island is a UNESCO World Heritage Site. Visitors can explore the ruins of the prison and learn about the horrors that took place there.

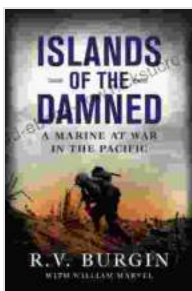

Alcatraz Island

Located in San Francisco Bay, California, Alcatraz Island was once home to one of the most notorious prisons in the world. The prison was closed in 1963, and today it is a popular tourist destination.
