Born in 1940, Ann grew up in a post-war Austria that was still struggling to come to terms with its Nazi past. She recalls her childhood as being filled with both joy and hardship, but she was always drawn to the stories and images of America that she saw in movies and magazines.

In 1960, at the age of 20, Ann immigrated to the United States with her husband, Peter. They settled in New York City, where Ann worked as a secretary while Peter pursued his studies in engineering.

Ann's early years in America were marked by culture shock and loneliness. She missed her family and friends back home, and she struggled to adjust to the fast-paced and impersonal nature of American life.

However, Ann was determined to make a new life for herself in America. She enrolled in English classes, joined a local church, and volunteered her time at a nearby soup kitchen.

Over time, Ann began to make friends and build a community in America. She found a job as a medical assistant, and she eventually became a citizen of the United States.

As Ann's life in America progressed, she became increasingly involved in her community. She served on the board of directors of her local library, volunteered at a senior center, and became a member of the local historical society.

Ann's story is a testament to the transformative power of cultural exchange. Through her journey of discovery and fulfillment, she has come to embody the spirit of the American dream.

In her memoir, Ann writes about the challenges and rewards of immigrating to a new country. She shares her experiences of cultural assimilation and personal growth, and she offers valuable insights into the importance of community involvement and giving back to society.

Ann Zwicker Kerr's Forty Years in America is an inspiring memoir that will appeal to anyone who has ever dreamed of living in a new country. It is a story of courage, resilience, and the power of the human spirit.
