The consultant, who is never given a name, is a slick-talking businessman who promises to help Lord Business "optimize" his kingdom. He uses a lot of jargon and buzzwords, and he seems to be more interested in making himself sound important than in actually helping Lord Business.

As the movie progresses, it becomes clear that the consultant is not all that he seems. He is actually a con artist who is only interested in lining his own pockets. He gives Lord Business bad advice, and he eventually leads him to ruin.

So, was Lord Business's consultant full of hot air? The answer is a resounding yes. He was a con artist who took advantage of Lord Business's gullibility. He was not interested in helping Lord Business achieve his goals, and he ultimately led him to ruin.

The Evidence

There is plenty of evidence to support the claim that Lord Business's consultant was full of hot air. Here are just a few examples:

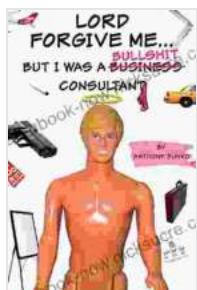

- The consultant uses a lot of jargon and buzzwords. This is a common tactic used by con artists to make themselves sound important and knowledgeable. However, the consultant's jargon is often meaningless, and it is clear that he does not really understand what he is talking about.
- The consultant makes a lot of promises that he cannot keep. He promises to help Lord Business "optimize" his kingdom, but he never actually delivers on this promise. In fact, he makes things worse by giving Lord Business bad advice.
- The consultant is more interested in making himself sound important than in actually helping Lord Business. He often interrupts Lord Business and talks over him. He also uses a lot of flattery to try to win Lord Business's favor.
- The consultant is ultimately revealed to be a con artist. He is arrested by the police at the end of the movie for fraud.

The

The evidence is clear: Lord Business's consultant was full of hot air. He was a con artist who took advantage of Lord Business's gullibility. He was not interested in helping Lord Business achieve his goals, and he ultimately led him to ruin.

If you are ever considering hiring a business consultant, be sure to do your research first. Make sure that the consultant is reputable and has a proven track record of success. Don't be fooled by slick-talking con artists who promise to deliver the world but can't deliver on their promises.
