- Experience: Dlamini Zuma has over 30 years of experience in government, including serving as Minister of Home Affairs and Foreign Minister. She is familiar with the workings of government and has a deep understanding of the challenges facing South Africa.
- Commitment to social justice: Dlamini Zuma is a lifelong advocate for social justice. She has fought for the rights of women, children, and the poor throughout her career. She is committed to building a more equal and just society for all South Africans.
- Ability to connect with voters: Dlamini Zuma is a charismatic and articulate leader. She is able to connect with voters on a personal level and inspire them with her vision for South Africa.

Dlamini Zuma also has some weaknesses that could make it difficult for her to win the presidency.

- Leadership skills: Dlamini Zuma's leadership skills have been questioned by some critics. They point to her tenure as Minister of Home Affairs, which was marked by a number of controversies.
- Ability to unite the country: South Africa is a deeply divided country, and Dlamini Zuma will need to be able to unite the country if she wants to be successful. However, some critics question her ability to do this, given her close ties to the ANC and her support for some of the party's more controversial policies.

Dlamini Zuma faces a number of challenges in her bid for the presidency.

- Cyril Ramaphosa: Cyril Ramaphosa is another strong candidate for the presidency. He is the current Deputy President of South Africa and the former leader of the ANC. Ramaphosa is seen as a more moderate and pragmatic leader than Dlamini Zuma, and he has the support of many business leaders and members of the ANC.
- Jacob Zuma: Former President Jacob Zuma is Dlamini Zuma's ex-husband, and he remains a powerful figure in the ANC. Zuma has been accused of corruption and other crimes, and his association with him could damage Dlamini Zuma's campaign.
- The ANC: The ANC is facing a number of challenges, including declining support in recent elections. Dlamini Zuma will need to be able to unite the party and motivate its supporters if she wants to win the presidency.

Nkosazana Dlamini Zuma is a strong candidate for the presidency, but she faces a number of challenges in her bid for the top job. She will need to be able to unite the ANC, overcome the challenges posed by Cyril Ramaphosa and Jacob Zuma, and convince voters that she is the best person to lead South Africa.

Only time will tell if she will be successful in her bid for the presidency, but she is certainly a formidable candidate.
