After graduating from Upper Canada College in 1956, Jennings attended Carleton University in Ottawa, where he majored in political science. During his university years, he worked as a reporter for the university newspaper and hosted a radio show called "Campus Query."

Early Career in Journalism

Upon graduating from Carleton University in 1960, Jennings began his professional journalism career as a reporter for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (CBC). He quickly rose through the ranks, becoming a news editor and foreign correspondent within a few years.

In 1965, Jennings relocated to the United States, where he joined the National Broadcasting Company (NBC). He initially covered the Vietnam War and later became the network's chief White House correspondent, reporting on the administrations of Presidents Johnson and Nixon.

Anchor of Nightly News

In 1983, Jennings was appointed anchor of NBC Nightly News, one of the most influential news programs in American history. He quickly established himself as a trusted and respected journalist, known for his authoritative reporting, clear articulation, and in-depth analysis.

Under Jennings' leadership, Nightly News became known for its coverage of major world events, including the fall of the Berlin Wall, the first Gulf War, and the September 11 attacks. Jennings' ability to connect with viewers on a human level and his unwavering commitment to truth earned him the title of "The Voice of America."

In-Depth Reporting and Investigative Journalism

In addition to his daily anchoring duties, Jennings produced several in-depth documentaries and special reports throughout his career. His groundbreaking series "The American Century" chronicled the history of the United States from 1950 to 2000.

Jennings also led a team of investigative journalists who uncovered numerous scandals and abuses of power, including the Iran-Contra affair and the Whitewater controversy. His relentless pursuit of the truth often made him a target of criticism, but he remained steadfast in his commitment to exposing wrongdoing.

Personal Life and Philanthropy

Peter Jennings was married twice. His first marriage to Anne Coleman ended in divorce in 1986. In 1997, he married Kayce Freed Jennings, a television producer and author.

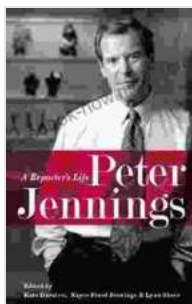

Jennings was actively involved in several charitable organizations and causes. He served on the board of the American Red Cross and the International Rescue Committee. He also supported numerous programs to improve journalism education and encourage young people to pursue a career in the media.

Legacy and Impact

Peter Jennings passed away on August 7, 2005, at the age of 67, after a long battle with lung cancer. His death was a profound loss to the world of journalism and to the American public.

Jennings was widely regarded as one of the greatest journalists of his generation. His unwavering pursuit of truth, his incisive analysis, and his ability to connect with viewers earned him the respect and admiration of millions. His legacy continues to inspire journalists and inform the public, ensuring that his voice will continue to resonate for years to come.

Peter Jennings was a true giant in the field of journalism. His life was dedicated to uncovering the truth, informing the public, and holding those in power accountable. His integrity, compassion, and commitment to excellence continue to serve as a model for aspiring journalists and a source of inspiration for all who believe in the transformative power of truth.
