Army Group North was one of the three main German army groups that invaded the Soviet Union in June 1941. Army Group North was responsible for the invasion of the Baltic States and the Leningrad region, and its soldiers fought some of the most intense battles of the Eastern Front.

The combat memoirs of soldiers who fought with Army Group North provide a unique and detailed account of the Eastern Front. These memoirs offer a firsthand look at the brutal fighting, the atrocities committed by both sides, and the resilience of the German soldiers.

The Invasion of the Soviet Union

Army Group North crossed the border into the Soviet Union on June 22, 1941, as part of Operation Barbarossa, the German invasion of the Soviet Union. The German soldiers quickly overwhelmed the Soviet defenses and advanced rapidly into Soviet territory.

However, the Soviet Union was a vast country, and the German army soon began to stretch its supply lines. The Soviet army also began to launch counterattacks, and the German advance slowed.

By the end of 1941, Army Group North had reached the outskirts of Leningrad, but the city refused to surrender. The siege of Leningrad lasted for nearly two years, and the German soldiers who fought there endured some of the most horrific conditions of the war.

The Siege of Leningrad

The siege of Leningrad was one of the most brutal and unforgiving battles of World War II. The German army surrounded the city and cut off all supplies. The people of Leningrad were forced to endure starvation, freezing temperatures, and constant shelling.

The German soldiers who fought in the siege of Leningrad were also subjected to extreme hardship. They were constantly under attack from Soviet snipers and artillery, and they had to endure the same harsh conditions as the civilians.

Despite the horrific conditions, the German soldiers continued to fight. They were determined to capture Leningrad, and they believed that they would eventually be victorious.

The Retreat from Russia

In January 1944, the Soviet army launched a massive offensive that broke the siege of Leningrad. The German army was forced to retreat from Russia, and Army Group North was eventually disbanded.

The retreat from Russia was a disaster for the German army. The soldiers were exhausted and demoralized, and they were ill-equipped to deal with the harsh winter conditions.

Many German soldiers died during the retreat from Russia. Others were captured by the Soviet army, and they were sent to prison camps.

The Legacy of Army Group North

Army Group North was one of the most powerful and effective fighting forces in the German army. The soldiers who fought with Army Group North were some of the most experienced and battle-hardened troops in the world.

However, the Eastern Front was a brutal and unforgiving theater of war. The German soldiers who fought in the East endured some of the most horrific conditions of the war, and many of them did not survive.
