Early Life and Education

Khatun was born into an influential family in the Middle Eastern city of Bukhara in the early 13th century. As the daughter of a wealthy merchant, she received a privileged education, uncommon for women of her time. She studied literature, poetry, history, and mathematics, developing a keen mind and a thirst for knowledge.

Marriage and Family Life

In her early twenties, Khatun was betrothed to a wealthy Mongol prince named Bayan. Journey to Mongolia

After the death of her husband, Khatun embarked on an extraordinary journey to Mongolia, the heart of the Mongol Empire. Accompanied by a small entourage, she traversed treacherous deserts, crossed vast mountain ranges, and encountered diverse cultures along the way. Her resilience and determination were put to the test, but she persevered, driven by a desire to learn and experience the unknown.

Life in the Mongol Court

Khatun's arrival in the Mongol court of Ögedei Khan was met with both curiosity and admiration. Her intelligence, cultural refinement, and diplomatic skills quickly earned her the respect of the Mongol nobility. This is the story of one of the most powerful women in all of human history.

Forced to marry the son of Genghis Khan, she worked her way from captive wife to leader of the world's largest empire.

She ruled with a woman as her companion.

She was not gentle. She was not polite.

She was not ineffective.

Her name was Töregene Khatun, and she carved out her heaven using the tools of hell.
