The Frontiersman's Early Years

Frank Grouard was born in 1850 to French-Canadian parents in Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan. From a tender age, he exhibited an unyielding spirit of adventure, honing his skills as a hunter and trapper in the unforgiving forests of the Upper Midwest. By the time he was in his early twenties, Grouard's reputation as a skilled outdoorsman had spread far and wide.

Into the Untamed West

In 1873, the allure of the untamed American West proved irresistible to Grouard. He joined an expedition led by General George Armstrong Custer, venturing into the heart of the Black Hills of South Dakota. This fateful encounter would forever alter the course of Grouard's life, as he witnessed firsthand the brutality of the Indian Wars and the escalating tensions between settlers and Native American tribes.

A Trusted Scout and Guide

Grouard's exceptional skills and intimate knowledge of the Western terrain quickly made him an invaluable asset to the U.S. Army. He served as a scout and guide during numerous campaigns, including the infamous Battle of the Little Bighorn in 1876. His unwavering loyalty and bravery earned him the respect of both his comrades and the Native American warriors he encountered.

Exploring the Yellowstone Country

After the Indian Wars subsided, Grouard turned his attention to exploring the uncharted territories of the American West. He became one of the first white men to venture into the remote and awe-inspiring Yellowstone Country, later designated as Yellowstone National Park. His detailed accounts of the region's geothermal wonders, abundant wildlife, and Native

American presence contributed significantly to the establishment of the park.
