The Birth of the Anti-Apartheid Movement

Apartheid was a system of racial segregation that was implemented in South Africa from 1948 to 1994. Under apartheid, black South Africans were denied basic rights such as the right to vote, the right to own land, and the right to education. They were also forced to live in segregated townships and were subject to constant harassment and violence.

The anti-apartheid movement began in the early 1900s with the formation of the African National Congress (ANC). The ANC was a multiracial organization that fought for the rights of all South Africans, regardless of race. In 1952, the ANC launched the Defiance Campaign, a mass campaign of civil disobedience against apartheid laws. The Defiance Campaign was met with brutal repression by the apartheid government, but it helped to galvanize the anti-apartheid movement.

The Sharpeville Massacre

In 1960, the anti-apartheid movement was dealt a major blow when the apartheid government massacred 69 unarmed protesters at Sharpeville.

The Sharpeville Massacre shocked the world and led to widespread international condemnation of the apartheid regime.

In the wake of the Sharpeville Massacre, the ANC and other anti-apartheid organizations were banned by the apartheid government. However, the movement continued to grow underground. In 1976, the Soweto Uprising erupted when students protested against the use of Afrikaans as the medium of instruction in black schools. The Soweto Uprising was a major turning point in the anti-apartheid movement and helped to bring the issue of apartheid to the forefront of international attention.

The End of Apartheid

In the 1980s, the anti-apartheid movement gained momentum as international pressure on the apartheid government increased. In 1990, the apartheid government released Nelson Mandela, the ANC leader who had been imprisoned for 27 years. Mandela's release was a major victory for the anti-apartheid movement and helped to pave the way for the end of apartheid.

In 1994, the first multiracial elections were held in South Africa. The ANC won the elections and Mandela became the first black president of South Africa. The end of apartheid was a major triumph for the anti-apartheid movement and marked a new era of hope and reconciliation for South Africa.

The Little Black of Change Today

The Little Black of Change is a powerful and moving tribute to the anti-apartheid movement. The exhibition is a reminder of the brutality of the apartheid regime and the resilience of the South African people who fought for their freedom. The exhibition is also a reminder of the importance of fighting for justice and equality.

The Little Black of Change is currently on display at the Apartheid Museum in Johannesburg, South Africa. The exhibition is a must-see for anyone who wants to learn more about the history of apartheid and the anti-apartheid movement.
