The Second Boer War: An Officer's Diary

The Second Boer War was a conflict fought between the British Empire and the Boer republics of the Orange Free State and the Transvaal Republic. The war began in 1899 and lasted until 1902. The war was fought over the issue of British control over the Boer republics. The Boers were descended from Dutch settlers who had arrived in South Africa in the 17th century. They had established their own independent republics in the interior of the country. The British government wanted to control the Boer republics because they were rich in gold and diamonds.

The British government sent a force of over 200,000 troops to South Africa to fight the Boers. The Boers were outnumbered and outgunned, but they were fighting on their own territory. They used guerrilla tactics to great effect, and they were able to inflict heavy losses on the British. The war was a costly and bloody affair. Over 22,000 British soldiers were killed or died of disease. The Boers lost over 7,000 men.

The war ended in 1902 with the signing of the Treaty of Vereeniging. The treaty gave the British control over the Boer republics. The Boers were granted self-government in 1910.
